

Matthew Goldsbrough

The full CV shows Matthew's breadth and depth. This note gives the short version: what to remember, what he is like to work with, and where he is most useful.

What should I remember about Matthew?

Matthew is most useful in the middle stage of growth, when early demand must become repeatable sales and the founder is still carrying too much of the commercial story.

He listens to people closest to the work, tests the commercial story against detail and asks direct questions until the practical choice is clear.

- Senior commercial roles at Hyperion and Informatica, with international work across Europe and the USA.
- NED at Britannia Garment Packaging, where the business recorded 3 successive years of balance-sheet growth, strengthened its international partner and supplier network, and won major retail clients.
- 16 years advising boards and management teams through Goldsbrough Consulting Limited across technology, education, finance and manufacturing.

What is he like to work with?

Matthew is calm, prepared and direct. He finds the important signal in complex commercial situations, tests assumptions and makes material trade-offs explicit.

He challenges founders and executives while leaving them in charge. The aim is clearer decisions, stronger management thinking and less dependence on any one person.

Where is Matthew most useful?

Matthew is open to salaried independent Non-Executive Director appointments in the North East and wider UK, particularly with founder-led or investor-backed businesses built around technology, software, data or tech-enabled services. The fit is strongest when:

- the board needs a clearer view before deciding what to do next;
- growth has outpaced the way people work together;
- the product is good, but the route to customers or source of value needs closer scrutiny.

He welcomes conversations with founders, investors, chairs and search firms about where he could be most useful.

The rest of the story: matthewgoldsbrough.com